At Syracuse University:

"Feminist Theory": An advanced critical inquiry into frameworks of meaning that organize contemporary issues on the politics of gender, emphasizing history of feminisms; U.S and transnational perspectives; and the relation between women's and gender oppression, theory-making, action/ organizing/movement-building, and systems of political and economic power.

"Graduate Feminist Pedagogy": A teaching and mentoring class for graduate students teaching assistants who lead the "Introduction to Women's Studies" recitation/discussion sections, in which sessions ranged from considerations of ethics in teaching, to classroom innovations, to strategizing for teaching theoretical argument.

"Introduction to Women's Studies": Undergraduate survey introduction to the interdisciplinary intersectional academic field of women's studies, examining and analyzing human experiences of sex and gender within contexts of power, oppression and liberation, while placing a special emphasis on the lives of those who identify as women and looking at sex and gender oppression/liberation not as a single issue but always in relation to the multiple realities experienced by any embodied person, including age, dis/ability, class, culture, community, nation, religion, race, sexuality, and other factors.

"Stranger Than Fiction: LGBT Creative Nonfiction": Undergraduate writing intensive course with creative nonfiction texts by lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people and creative nonfiction writing by students exploring themes of bodies, genders and sexualities.

"Bodies, Genders, Sexualities": Undergraduate Introduction to queer studies, exploring how sexuality, gender, and embodiment are understood across communities and through time with an interdisciplinary analysis of literature, film, mass media, websites, research, and theory.

"Introduction to LGBT Pedagogy": Seminar for undergraduate and graduate teaching assistants for 'Bodies, Genders, Sexualities'

"Trans Genders and Sexualities": Advanced undergraduate/graduate course with a concentrated look at the contemporary U.S., and how people actually live their sex, gender, and sexuality in infinitely complex and interdependent ways that defy these binary oppositions; and at scholarship and creative work that explores the history and the social/economic basis of gender stratification and that documents the presence of multiple genders in different cultures and historical periods.

"Writing In Between: Creative Nonfiction": Advanced reading and writing undergraduate/graduate seminar in creative nonfiction.

Development of two new courses for the new LGBT minor, cross-listed with the Women's Studies Program: QSX/WSP 438: "Trans Genders and Sexualities" and WSP/QSX 447: "Sexualities and Genders in World Teen Cultures."

"Narratives of Power": Writing-intensive undergraduate seminar on the creation of narrative in any form (fiction, creative nonfiction, poetry) and the intersection of story with power, in relation to genders; ethnicities, race, and nation; sexualities; class; and other issues.

"Nation, Sex, Sexuality: Critical Perspectives on Contemporary Life in the U.S.": Advanced undergraduate class on Intersections of nation, sex, and sexuality, beginning with the photographs and accounts of the Abu Ghraib tortures of Arab and Muslim people by U.S. male and female soldiers. Focus on the U.S., and how the variety and scope of the many national identities now existing within the country are in dynamic relation to people's experiences of maleness, femaleness and otherness; multiple genders and sexualities; and class.
